PIANO-PLAYING BLUES

"William! Yoo hoo! William Wallace! You come right in here!"

His mother's voice, clear and definite, echoed in Willy's ears. He knew why she was calling. "Sorry, fellows," he muttered.

"But you can't go yet!" yelled Larry Hackett. "We're right in the middle of our club meeting!"

"Yeah," chimed in Bud Brady, "and we haven't decided what we're going to do about Janie White's darn party!"

"That's right!" nodded Tim and Tom Watson. They were twins, and they did everything together. They even talked together.

"I'm kind of afraid there's no way out, fellows," Willy began.

"William!" interrupted his mother's voice again. "Are you coming?"

"I've got to go!" Willy said desperately. "See you all tomorrow at Janie's party! Can't be helped, that's all!" And off he ran, racing across the field to his house.

Mrs. Wallace was waiting for him at the door. "You know perfectly well this is your practice hour, William!" she told her son severely. "Now you march right over to that piano and start practicing!"

"Aw, Mom! Do I have to?" Willy protested, for perhaps the millionth time. "Piano playing is for sissies!"

CASPER, THE FRIENDLY GHOST

For answer, his mother pointed to the big upright piano in the living room, and, sighing, Willy took his place at the keyboard. How he hated those piano lessons and the practicing that went with them. That kind of stuff was for girls . . . like the party he and his friends were forced to go to the next day. He thought about the party as his fingers wandered over the piano keys. Janie White was in their class at school . . . her mother knew their mothers . . . the boys had to go, whether they liked it or not.

And sure enough, the next afternoon, they were all there at the party . . . Willy, Larry, Bud, and the twins . . . all uncomfortable, all bored with the giggling chatter of the girls. Suddenly, Janie's big brother Jim, a tall, handsome Marine home on leave, appeared. The boys crowded around him, pelting him with questions about the Marines, admiring his stunning uniform and his bulging muscles.

"Okay, okay!" Jim laughed after a while. "No more Marine talk! Let's have some fun!" And with that, he sat down at the White's piano and began pounding out a tune. "Everybody sing!" he grinned.

Willy's mouth fell open. A Marine playing the piano! And enjoying it! The whole party seemed to come to life. Boys and girls crowded around the piano, singing all the old favorites at the top of their lungs. Gone was the boredom, the discomfort! They were all having a wonderful time!

Silently, Willy blessed his mother and swore a private vow never again to neglect his practicing. And aloud he said . . . proudly . . . "Any time you get tired, Jim, I'll take over! I'm a pretty good piano player myself!"

THE FRIENDLY DRAGON

Dexter was a dragon . . . a baby dragon, to be exact. But despite his tender years, Dexter had all the standard dragon equipment. He had a long, scaly body, a sinuous, whip-like tail, a flat, pointed head and a forked tongue. He even knew how to breathe fire, the way dragons are supposed to do. The only problem with Dexter was that he didn't LIKE doing the things dragons are supposed to do! He didn't LIKE breathing fire! He didn't LIKE roaring ferociously! He just plain didn't like scaring people half out of their wits!

His mother and father argued with him by the hour. "But, Dexter," they'd plead, "you're a DRAGON! And dragons are SUPPOSED to frighten people! That's our job!"

"I don't believe it!" Dexter would argue stubbornly. "I think the good Lord meant us all to be friendly and love one another, and that's what I want to do!"

"But who loves a dragon?" his parents would scoff. "Everyone's afraid of us!"

And that remark always made Dexter very sad. Because it was true. Everyone WAS afraid of him, just because he was a dragon. People never even gave him a chance to be friendly. When they saw him coming, they took to their heels and ran the other way! But Dexter always hoped, deep down in his heart, that someday, somewhere, somehow, he'd find a friend.

And so it came to pass that one day there was great and terrible excitement in the town where Dexter lived. It seems the princess, the king's only daughter, had wandered into the forest and gotten lost! Searching parties were organized all over the town. The king offered a reward to anyone who would find and save his child. People scurried to and fro in an agony of excitement. But nobody found the princess.

Except Dexter. He was taking his customary stroll that day, deep in the heart of the forest, when suddenly he came upon a golden-haired young lady, huddled on the ground and weeping bitter tears. At the sight of him, she jumped to her feet, her face pale with terror. "Oh, don't eat me!" she begged. "Please!"

"Eat you!" echoed Dexter in astonishment. "Of course I won't eat you! What a silly idea! I'd like to HELP you if I can. Will you let me?"

The princess was stunned at the friendliness of the young dragon, but she quickly dried her tears and told him who she was and how she had gotten lost. And Dexter, kindly soul that he was, soothed her and calmed her, and then led her out of the forest to safety. But at the edge of town, he stopped. "I'd better leave you here," he explained. "I'm not wanted in town . . ."

"Not wanted!" the princess echoed. "You're my friend, and you're coming straight to the palace with me!" And so it was. Side by side, they walked right through the heart of town. For Dexter had truly found a FRIEND at last!

MOTHER EARTH

THE STORY OF THE SKY:

"Gee, lookit that jet plane go," exclaimed Jed Jenson, pointing to a vapor trail streaking across the sky. "I wonder how the earth looks from where he is!"

"Probably a lot like the other planets," said his friend, Alton White, putting down his book. "Just a big ball whirling in space with ridges and stuff."

"What do you mean, like other planets?" inquired Jed. "I thought the earth was, well—different!"

"It's different in a lot of ways," Alton told him. "But it's a planet just the same. It's a planet 93 million miles from the sun, and while it's larger than Mercury and Mars, it's much smaller than many others."

"Oh, all right, Professor Know-It-Alton," sniffed Jed. "You're so smart, tell me how our planet is different from the others, besides having us on it."

"Gladly," replied Alton, always glad to share his knowledge. "For one thing

the Earth has magnetism—"

"Oh, sure, I know," interrupted the other. "That's why my compass needle points to the North Magnetic Pole."

"Yes, although we don't know just why," went on Alton. "Scientists think it has something to do with the Earth's interior; maybe it's just a big mass of iron."

"Golly, why don't they dig it up and make a fortune," exclaimed Jed, who always had an eye for business.

"Nobody knows much about the inside of the Earth yet," was the reply. "The deepest oil well only goes down 21,000 feet; we aren't even sure how hot it is inside the Earth."

"Well, OK, what else is different about our good old planet?" Jed asked impatiently.

"Most important for us is the atmosphere around the Earth," continued Alton. "It contains a lot of oxygen so it's possible for us to live and breathe."

"You mean other planets don't get a deal like that?" said Jed.

"Well, other planets have atmosphere," replied Alton "but it doesn't support life like ours. Another thing—only the Earth has water, like lakes and oceans."

"Yipes," exclaimed Jed. "Imagine living where you couldn't go swimming."

"Yes, we're lucky to have a planet like ours," Alton reminded him.

"You bet," said Jed, slapping his comrade on the back. "Thanks for all the information, pal. Next time I feel like visiting the other planets, I'll remember—there's no place like home."

LITTLE AUDREY

"Hey, who's the new kid?" asked Dusty Rhodes as a tall, serious-looking lad approached the group of kids in the Soda Shoppe.

"He just started school today," volunteered Marsha Hunt.

"Hey, fella, c'mon over and join the gang and tell us all about yourself," called out Freddy Updike. "We'd like to know how you like our town."

"Gee, thanks," said the stranger. "I'm Travis Porter. I haven't been here long enough to get to know this place. You see, I'm from San Francisco—"

"Gee, tell us about it," broke in Marsha. "I've never even been out of our state."

"Well," went on Travis, "first of all, it's a real old city. The Spaniards settled there way back in the 18th Century. In 1776 they founded a mission and named it for St. Francis (or San Francisco) of Assisi. That's how the city got its name."

"OK, it's real old and all that stuff," chimed in Dusty. "But what's it got that makes it so great?"

"For one thing," replied Travis, "San Francisco is up-to-date. It doesn't have a lot of old run-down buildings. After the big fire and earthquake in 1906 everything was rebuilt so now it's more beautiful than ever."

"Isn't that where the Golden Gate Bridge is?" inquired Freddy.

"Yes, and also the San Francisco Oakland Bay Bridge—the longest bridge in the world," Travis told him.

"Gee, it sure sounds like a wonderful place!" exclaimed Marsha.

"It sure is," continued Travis. "And the hills are so high they have to use cable-cars to get around some parts of the city. And, of course, San Francisco is one of the great seaports of the world, and it has three airports as well."

"Golly, I bet you see people from all over the world, don't you, Travis?" cried Freddy enviously.

"You bet!" he replied. "Why, you ought to see Chinatown—it's the largest settlement of its kind outside the Orient. And boy, that Fisherman's Wharf is sure a sight—always something going on, with all those fishing boats and everything."

"Well, we've got a nice town here," said Dusty as he started to leave. "Meet me here tomorrow and I'll show you around. I hope I know as much about our city as you do about San Francisco."
